Miller, of Wilmington, Del., national secretary, and Mrs. Preston Lea, also of Wilmington.

The Dames' colors, in yellow and blue, were carried out in decoration and table adornment. Mrs. Cox, wearing a white lingerie gown and the national insignia, received with Mrs. Jamieson, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Lea. Yesterday being the eighteenth birthday of the Virginia Society of Dames, Mrs. William Todd Robins read a brief resume of the most important events in its history. The cake was cut by Mrs. Grace Henry Lyons, considered to be the founder of the Virginia society of Dames. Mrs. L. H. Dashiell was toastmistress of the occasion.

Altogether, the luncheon was a brilliant affair and a delightful commemoration of an anniversary in the life of an organization which reproduces, in its social activities, the grace and beauty of both past and present. Griffin-Peyton.

France, whose soldiers formed part of Washington's forces. Notwithstanding the light rain which fell in the morning, crowds of people came from the country about Yorktown, and visitors from far distant points arrived by steamboats from Norfolk and by stage from Richmond and other points in the Old Dominion.

The streets of the village were thronged with patriotic people when the parade, marking the opening of the ceremonies, started to move.

At the conclusion of the procession the people gathered in the park surrounding the beautiful monument, which commemorated the achievement of General Washington and his allied American and French troops. At exactly the hour when the troops of Lord Cornwallis began to march out of Yorktown 125 years ago, with flags encased and fifes and drums playing the then popular British march, "The World Turned Upside Down," the program was begun.

The adjutant Henry R. Hatfield, of Philadelphia, president of the historical society, presided. An invocation by Rev. George Washington Dames, of Baltimore, chairman of the signers, was followed by an address by Major Hatfield, who introduced Governor Mann, of Virginia, as chairman of the occasion.

Governor Mann's address was followed by the singing of "America." William Shields McKean, secretary and founder of the Yorktown Historical Society, read "The Surrender," and the audience rose to their feet as the bands played "La Marseillaise" and the "Star Spangled Banner." The address by W. F. Andrews, auditor of the United States Treasury, and a benediction by Rev. William H. Scott, chaplain of the coast artillery corps at Fort Monroe, concluded the literary program.

Thirteen Balloons Released.
Significant of the liberation of the American colonies from British rule, thirteen balloons, representing the thirteen original colonies, were unleashed in the air, and began their aerial journey, amid the applause of the throng, to herald the anniversary of the great victory and the end of the Revolutionary War.

Only twice before had the anniversary of the birthday of the republic been celebrated in this way at Yorktown. The first time was the centennial anniversary in 1881, when the cornerstone of the monument was laid; the second time was a year ago. Hereafter there will be a celebration annually under the auspices of the Yorktown Historical Society of the United States.

One of the important features of the work for which the society was organized is the marking in enduring form of the spot where the "official" surrender of the British army was made by Lord Cornwallis to General Washington; also where General O'Hara delivered to General Lincoln the sword of Lord Cornwallis; the field in which the British soldiers laid down their arms; the headquarters of General Washington; Lafayette, Rochambeau, Nelson and Lincoln, and the British redoubt, stormed and captured by the detachments under Lafayette and Alexander Hamilton October 14-19 years ago.
